

Closed

These are photographs of closed, abandoned or otherwise unavailable places. They explore the idea of exclusion. What we reject or keep out says much about who we are.

These photographs are much quieter than most shot in New York. Taken before the day's business has started or after it has concluded, they depict another side of this overpoweringly loud and ceaselessly moving metropolis. These pictures reveal a New York that locals know well but few outsiders see.